

Message from the President

Labels have acquired a new found responsibility, status and position as the most comprehensive medium both for product decoration and identification, particularly in the packaging. The industry often debates about the positive role of Labels in today's production, promotion and marketing and its attention getting value - as against the other advertising media. Probably this has not been measured. With the probability of the labels becoming the significant resource medium for retail display and even creating the effective market impact the companies might turn to enhancing their labels qualitatively and with niche characteristics in-built such as bar codes and RFID besides tamper evidence. If the labels could become a major source of product promotion, a significant saving in the advertisement and market promotion budget could be possible.

Labels and Labelling Technologies cannot be any more restrictive and if done it will limit their opportunities. The industry should therefore, identify strategic opportunities and create sustained competitive advantages through more comprehensive interaction. The pulse that needs to be touched is the industries' value chain and the specifics of the ultimate customer. Emerging markets will still demand in-depth local knowledge and an effective solution particularly the primary product labels can have in-built additional functions.

PRESS RELEASE

31st March 2008
Release: Immediate

INDIA'S LABEL EXPERT JOINS FINAT COMMITTEE

In a significant move that represents FINAT's continued expansion of interests in the Far East, the self-adhesive label trade association has recruited Harveer Singh Sahni, managing director of India's Weldon Celloplast group, to its influential Membership Committee.

Mr Sahni and his company led India's entry into international markets and his close association with the entire Indian label industry is the result of his long involvement and support of major label events in India and abroad.

FINAT has been expanding its interest and involvement in label printing in the Far East and led the way in creating an Indo-European label exchange programme aimed at introducing closer links between printers in both zones.

Jan Frederik Vink, President of FINAT said: "With Mr Sahni joining our Membership Committee, he brings to us unrivalled knowledge of the industry in his country and will help promote FINAT in that globally important area. After the success of the Indo-European label exchange programme, we have come to the conclusion that our ability to give exclusive information and create networking opportunities can be of the utmost support to the growth of the Indian label industry."

Mr Sahni joined his family-owned stationary business group in 1971, after gaining a BSc in chemistry, and became involved in self-adhesives in 1978 when he began siliconising operations as a prelude to producing labelstocks. Weldon Celloplast is known for its adoption of new technologies and development of new products.

He has made several important presentations to the label industry and has authored influential articles for the leading label trade magazines.
